

In this one day workshop we'll learn how to make a mandala dot painting. Mandalas are circular geometric designs often associated with meditative or sacred traditions. They represent unity and wholeness, and examples are found in cultures all over the world and throughout time. To make a mandala you begin at a center and radiate outwards in concentric circles. Symmetry and repetition are essential to the design.

In this workshop we'll work intuitively, painting on a flat 6" board. We'll first measure and mark our guidelines, then use dotting tools, brushes and stencils for our designs. We'll paint with metallic acrylics on a mat acrylic background. You don't need any painting experience and the results can be stunning. The three hour workshop fee is $50 per student with a three student minimum. This includes all materials. We meet at various locations in Providence, RI, including the Buttonwoods Brewery, 50 Sims Avenue, located just behind the Farm Fresh building at Sims and Kinsley. (Buttonwoodsbrewery.com) I most often hold the workshops on Saturdays from noon until 3 pm.

This is a fun afternoon out, a great way to socialize, relax, and chat with friends while you're learning something new. You do need to sign up in advance. For available dates please email me at pogalleryri@gmail.com or message me through facebook: Anne Huntington Handwovens.

Anne Huntington is a Providence fiber artist. Best known as a hand weaver, she is also skilled in a variety of other craft techniques including termari and coiled basketry. Many people know her from Po Gallery which she co-founded and directed for 27 years before closing in 2013. Samples of her work can be seen at www.pogalleryri.com and on Facebook: Anne Huntington Handwovens.